

International Labor Organization (ILO)

The International Labor Organization has been headquartered in Geneva Switzerland since 1920, except the period 1940-1948, when it was located in Montreal, Canada. ILO conferences have a tripartite structure, with representatives from government, labor, and industry. All ILO members participate in the International Labor Conferences, which usually holds sessions annually. The Governing Body meets more frequently. Other conferences include regional conferences, industrial conferences on particular industries, and special conferences on special subjects.
